Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite Expands Fernandina Beach Family Law Resources for Nassau County Families

August 28, 2026

JACKSONVILLE, FL - August 28, 2026 -
Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite has renewed its commitment to serving Nassau County residents through its Fernandina Beach office, positioning the location as an accessible local resource for families navigating a wide range of family law matters. The effort centers on helping area families understand the legal processes and options available to them under Florida law.

Families in Fernandina Beach and throughout Nassau County face important legal questions at many stages of life. Those questions may involve considering divorce, establishing parenting plans, determining child custody arrangements, or addressing child support obligations. Others arise later, when a change in circumstances calls for a modification of an existing court order. The firm's Fernandina Beach office update reflects an ongoing focus on making information about these matters available to the local community.

Understanding how the Florida family law system works can help families prepare for significant decisions.

Divorce, for example, may involve property division, spousal support, and parenting arrangements, while paternity and parenting plan matters often require careful attention to the best interests of the children involved. Modifications allow parents to seek adjustments to custody, support, or timesharing when life circumstances change, such as relocation or a shift in income.

"Family law questions rarely arrive at convenient moments, and many families simply want to understand their options before making a decision," said Jay Henderlite, managing partner at Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite. "The goal for the Fernandina Beach office is to serve as a reliable local resource where Nassau County families can find clear information about the processes that affect them."

The firm notes that family law matters are often interconnected. A divorce may raise child support and parenting questions, and an initial custody order may later require modification as children grow and circumstances evolve. By presenting these topics together as a broader resource, the Fernandina Beach office aims to help families see how different issues relate to one another rather than viewing each in isolation.

Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite also produces educational content on family law topics, including the podcast When Split Happens, which addresses common questions that arise during divorce and related proceedings. Such resources are intended to support families as they consider their circumstances and prepare for conversations about their next steps.

"Access to accurate information matters at every stage, whether a family is just beginning to think about divorce or is dealing with a change that affects an existing agreement," Henderlite said. "A well-informed family is better positioned to make thoughtful choices for their future."
