

Golden Group International Highlights USA Manufacturing of Menstrual Care Products for Institutional Procurement

September 16, 2026

Town of Patterson, New York - September 16, 2026 -

Golden Group International, Ltd., a U.S. manufacturer of commercial menstrual care dispensers, receptacles and disposal systems, is highlighting the importance of domestic manufacturing and product-level country-of-origin information for schools, government agencies and institutional procurement teams. The information is intended to help public-sector and institutional buyers distinguish between products manufactured by Golden Group International in the United States and complementary products the company distributes on behalf of other manufacturers.

For procurement projects subject to domestic sourcing requirements, country of origin can be an important part of product evaluation. Federal purchases may be subject to requirements such as the Buy American Act, while state and local projects may have separate domestic-preference requirements. Procurement teams should therefore confirm the requirements applicable to each project and verify the country of origin of the specific products being considered. This can be especially useful when procurement teams are comparing multiple products or preparing specifications for different facilities.

Golden Group International manufactures its GGI commercial menstrual care dispensers and receptacles in the United States, while also distributing complementary facility products from other manufacturers. Product-level country-of-origin information allows procurement teams to identify GGI-manufactured products when domestic sourcing is a consideration and to evaluate the requirements applicable to their specific project.

"Public buyers are held to standards that many suppliers do not fully address," said Jackie Transue, President of Golden Group International. "A U.S. address on an invoice is not the same as a product made in a U.S. facility. Our aim is to make the difference clear at the product level so that procurement teams can document their decisions with confidence."

Golden Group International's institutional menstrual care line includes U.S.-manufactured commercial menstrual product dispensers and sanitary napkin receptacles, along with complementary receptacle liners, courtesy bag systems and menstrual product refills. GGI dispensers are designed for demanding commercial and institutional environments, with durable steel construction, low-maintenance operation and compatibility with standard, non-proprietary menstrual product refills where applicable. These features can help facilities teams simplify maintenance and ongoing supply planning across multiple restrooms or buildings.

A growing number of states have adopted requirements addressing access to free menstrual products in certain schools and public facilities, increasing attention on reliable dispensing and disposal equipment for institutional restrooms. As programs expand, schools and agencies may also need to consider durability, refill availability and long-term maintenance alongside sourcing requirements.

"School districts and agencies are equipping restrooms on tighter timelines than before," Transue said. "When a specification calls for domestically manufactured goods, the buyer needs to identify which products actually meet that condition. Sorting manufactured items from distributed items early in the process prevents complications later."

Golden Group International encourages buyers to review origin details on individual product pages rather than applying a single assumption across an entire catalog. The company maintains that transparency at the item level serves institutional customers more effectively than broad claims about a supplier's overall footprint. Product-level information can also make it easier for facilities teams to compare options across larger or multi-building procurement projects across different institutional settings.

Golden Group International, Ltd. is a U.S. manufacturer of GGI commercial menstrual care dispensers, sanitary napkin receptacles and disposal systems for commercial, institutional and public-sector facilities. The company also distributes complementary menstrual care, hygiene and facility products from other manufacturers.
